

Peace Task Force Presents
DISAGREEING ON EVERYTHING:
An Arab and a Jew Debate the Future of the Middle East

Anisa Mehdi

Michael Lame

Anisa Mehdi, an Emmy-award winning journalist and filmmaker specializing in Islam, and Michael Lame, a management consultant and former resident of Israel, will share conflicting perspectives on the historical, religious, political, and psychological barriers to peace between Israelis and Palestinians. Friends and collaborators for more than 20 years, Anisa, an American Arab, and Michael, an American Jew, have served together on the board of directors of The Foundation for Mideast Communication. They have also co-led the “Re-Thinking the Middle East” Workshop for Christian, Jewish, and Muslim audiences around the U.S. They also lead daylong seminars called “Seeing Both Sides” for American corporations, and are collaborating on a book about this work. Their peaceful debate, “Disagreeing on Everything,” gives listeners new insight into effective communication on a very sensitive topic. It will increase knowledge of and appreciation for both sides of the Arab-Israeli conflict, and is certain to stimulate an on-going concern about the subject. Co-sponsored with Adult Education. A reception with the speakers will follow.

Sunday, April 6, 1 p.m.
Reidy Friendship Hall
Unitarian Church of All Souls
1157 Lexington Ave (East 80th)
New York City

